“Seeing the GP actually talk to the child and all the different stages, and then discussing it, was really useful and very different from just talking about it.” (GP, RESPONDS training participant)

The RESPONDS study bridges the knowledge and practice gap between domestic violence and child safeguarding.

We developed an evidence-base for training and designed, piloted and evaluated a new multi-component training intervention for general practice teams.

The training pack was designed and developed collaboratively using multi-professional expertise from health, research, training and practice in domestic violence and child safeguarding.

RESPONDS is independent research commissioned and funded by the Department of Health Policy Research Programme. Bridging the Knowledge and Practice Gap between Domestic Violence and Child Safeguarding: Developing Policy and Training for General Practice, 115/0003
